Keywords: love conflict, psychological literature, Hati Suhita, Khilma Anis, character analysis.

This study aims to analyze the love conflicts experienced by the characters in the novel Hati Suhita by Khilma Anis through a psychological literary approach. The novel portrays the dynamics of the emotional and psychological relationships of the main characters, influenced by traditions, cultural values, and their internal struggles. This study employs a descriptive qualitative method with a psychological approach, particularly focusing on the theories of love conflict and the struggle for individual identity.

The findings reveal that the love conflicts in this novel are triggered by clashes between forced love, familial expectations, and the individual's desire to determine their own life path. These conflicts influence the character development and decisions of the protagonists, highlighting the complexity of human emotions in dealing with dilemmas of love and obligation.

This research contributes to understanding the psychological dimensions in literary works while also demonstrating the relevance of the values presented in the novel to societal life. The novel Hati Suhita not only offers a love story but also provides a profound reflection on the courage to confront internal conflicts and choose an authentic life path.
