The use of surveys is a necessity because the world is being hit by a COVID-19 pandemic, especially in Indonesia. With the widespread pandemic, the government implemented large-scale social restrictions, which caused all Indonesian people to be limited in their activities. This is what makes movement limited when doing this research, so they use a survey through a questionnaire, which of course does not violate health protocols.

This study uses a quantitative approach method. The subjects of this study were 5 coaches of the U-21 futsal league 1 team in Sumenep Regency. This research was conducted using a questionnaire given to 5 futsal coaches with the aim of knowing the results of the existence of training during the covid-19 pandemic.

The results showed that judging from the questionnaires that had been given to the respondents, it could be seen that the coaches did not approve of a ban on activities during the pandemic, especially futsal training.
